Trust

poems by Liz Waldner

Winner of the 2008 Open Book Competition, selected by the Open Book Editorial Committee 5.5 x 8.5 x .224", 69 pp., $15.95 paper
ISBN 978-1-880834-84-8, LCCN 2008054543

“Liz Waldner's Trust is a book I've been waiting to read for years. Political in the extreme, deliciously crafted, as menacing as it is hysterical, as intellectually sophisticated as it is laugh-out-loud funny, this book ought to be written in silver pen on bathroom stalls, sent as gold records to outer space, or written in gin on a glass-top table in your favorite karaoke bar. Slip a copy into your shoulder-bag and take it wherever you go.”

—Kazim Ali, author of The Fortieth Day

“In Liz Waldner's weird and luminous poems, the empirical and the empyrean are as two sides of a copper beech leaf. The changeling slips out of old names into new uses, slips out of old uses into new names. Between the phenomenon and the noumenon depends (deep ends) a trust—a wavering alliance fed on fiery symbiosis. This is comedy in the most painfully honest and brilliant light, comedy that gives our ears and minds a miraculous whipping, that teaches us willingness to be made new, to make of the self one's 'own bright threshold.'”

—Sarah Gridley, author of Weather Eye Open

Born in Cleveland, Liz Waldner grew up in rural Mississippi and, after various factory, janitorial, botanical, and museum jobs, graduated from St. John's College in Annapolis at the age of twenty-eight. She wrote for eighteen years before publishing the first of her six previous books, which have won such awards as the Iowa Poetry Prize, the Beatrice Hawley Award, and the Academy of American Poets' James Laughlin Prize.
