OBJECTIVES

- Gain an appreciation for the evidence-based relationship between participation in creative engagement and health in older adults (lecture, discussion, readings).
- Engage in a number of activities designed to promote creative expression (e.g., journaling, rubber stamping).
- Reflect on the subjective meaning and influence of the experience.
- Acquire strategies for designing activities to promote creative expression.
- Use the resource list of websites, toolkits and activities to obtain programming resources and assistance for making arts participation more broadly available to older adults.
- Foster new relationships between practitioners in aging services and creative and performing artists.

Additional assistance for this series was provided by the Art Therapy Studio

This CEU series is one of the first projects of the Northeast Ohio Center for Creative Aging (NEOCCA). The Center was formed in 2007 through the collaborative effort of more than 20 representatives from local aging and arts organizations. Support for planning was provided by the Cleveland Foundation. NEOCCA is staffed by professionals from the Benjamin Rose Institute.
