Wood casegoods with a work ethic

In the past, wood casegoods have been easy to look at, but not so easy to work with. All show, and not enough go. As the workplace evolved and we expected more from our office furnishings, conventional wood furniture stubbornly resisted attempts to make it responsive or adaptable to dynamic environments. Orlando is anything but conventional.

Thin profiles, curved lines and rich finishes create an aesthetic statement that belies the real beauty of Orlando — an amazing ability to adapt to your unique and changing work styles.

It puts work in its place

There's work. And there's labor. Work is progress. Labor is effort. The difference is accessibility. Orlando puts the right solutions in the right places, with work-in-progress storage, pull-out drawers, and mobile pedestal storage. A place for everything. Everything in its place. That's how work gets done.

Wood: Natural Maple, Seating: System 58 Mid-Back, Safari Leather Black.

It moves to meet your needs

Some of us like personal space. Some of us like shared space. Most of us spend time in both, often in the same environment. Orlando rolls, slides, locks and docks to adapt to almost any type of work format, accommodating and integrating work space, document storage and tools. Working alone? Fine. Working together? No problem.

Orlando's Project Drawers put current tasks aside where you can retrieve them quickly.

Project Shelves provide fast and easy access to ongoing work.

It does much more with a little less

More technology. Less space. A lopsided equation destined to fail in most office environments. Orlando squeezes the most efficiency from any given space by accommodating people and the technology we use equally well. Multiple wire management options cleanly route power and data, and wall plugs are always accessible. Defined personal work space melds with collaborative areas; everybody's happy.

Orlando's Wire Management Arc puts wires, cords and cables out of sight, but within reach.

It feels like success, not excess

It's a subtle difference, best expressed in the furnishings you choose. Orlando matches that subtlety with warm, subdued wood tones and clean, uncomplicated lines in a classical use of office space. It's tasteful, understated, smart. It feels right in a business that understands how to make money, and how to use it.
