Student"

Robert W. Brown, Ph.D.

Physics Department

I have worked with a dozen high-tech industrial companies, advised 40 master and doctoral theses in a master's program for entrepreneurial physics and in an applied physics PhD program, been involved with four start-up manufacturing companies focused on physics high-technology and spent 30 years collaborating with industrial physicists on research and development. With this perspective, I would like to talk about what you should do to optimize your chances as a physicist for going to work in industry and for becoming an entrepreneur.
