The Norman Krumholtz Annual Lecture Series provokes an important conversation in the Levin College and the urban planning community at large as part of Levin's ongoing effort to be a thought leader in urban planning.

A legendary city planner, community development leader, and planning professor at the Levin College, Professor Norman Krumholz enjoys a national reputation as an early champion of equity planning, defined as considering the impact of any decision on a city's poorest residents, and as enhancing the choices of those who have the fewest choices.

Professor Susan B. Fainstein, Senior Research Fellow in the Harvard Graduate School of Design, is a widely recognized scholar in urban planning and design. Professor Fainstein's work has demonstrated the need to understand how urban form and places are critical components in human achievement.
